PREFACE

In 2001, the Center for the Study of Balkan Societies and Cultures (CSBSC) in Graz initiated a research project on recent historiography in Southeast Europe funded by the Austrian Ministry of Education, Science and Culture. Sixteen historians from the region and Austria worked on the project to analyse the state of Southeast European historiography and its development since the end of socialism.¹ The aim of the project was to define the place of historiography in the transformed Balkan states and to present the major trends in recent historical scholarship in the region. The authors shared the concern that history and the ways a society remembers its past — a process to which historians make a significant contribution — also play an important role in the current and future development of any country. The discipline of history can impede the development of democratic and tolerant relations but it can also facilitate them. Historians have a responsibility to society they have too often tragically failed in the past by providing authoritarian and nationalist ideologies with historical legitimacy. The project concentrated on the political meanings of historical writing, and in how far historians have overcome the legacy of complicity with the communist system and the traps of nationalism. Greece was included as a valuable comparative example of a country that experienced transformation from another type of dictatorship to democracy.

The results revealed that history is an important issue for the states of Southeast Europe and their populations. This is illustrated by the privileged position historiography enjoys in comparison with other disciplines in the humanities despite the financial problems many of the institutions engaged in historical research faced during the troubled years of transformation. Nevertheless, in most countries of Southeast Europe a great variety of institutes is doing research in the field of history, and society — for better or worse — is showing an interest. The institutional framework of historical research is important for understanding the dynamics of the production of historical knowledge since institutions have a significant impact on how the individual historian approaches the past. A central aim of the research project was to map the institutional landscape in the field of historiography.

The handbook gives an overview of the most significant historical research institutes in the countries of Southeast Europe (Albania, Bosnia-Herzegovina, Bulgaria, Croatia, Greece, Macedonia, Montenegro, Romania, Serbia — with a separate section on Kosovo —, and Slovenia). Aside from state-run historical institutes, important non-governmental research centres are included in the documentation, as well as museums and archives, in as far as they carry out research. With this comprehensive information, the handbook details the institutional richness and variety of historiography in the region. It not only reveals the foci of research and the directions of state funding for historical writing, but offers details on the character and output of historical institutes enabling readers to locate them and obtain an idea of what kind of research they do. Each chapter includes information on the institutional affiliation of the respective institute, its structure and staff, as well as its research topics and major publications (monographs, collections and periodicals). Institutes are identified by their original name as well as its English translation. Contact details are also given.

The institutions are described in the following order: history and history-related institutes of the Academy of Sciences or analogous institutions; university departments of history; regional institutes, museums and archives; non-governmental institutions and private institutions concerned with historical research.

For anyone interested in Southeast European historiography, the handbook presents an essential tool for locating the leading institutes in this field. By making the data available, the authors hope to facilitate co-operation and information exchange. Although the authors did their best to include the most relevant institutes in the handbook, they acknowledge that the collection is not complete. Should any reader feel that a further historical research institute should be included in this book, then he or she is invited to inform the Center for the Study of Balkan Studies so that we can update the information.

(The foundation has also research institutes in the areas of biological research and biotechnology, organic and pharmaceutical chemistry, theoretical and physical chemistry.)

PROFILE

It houses a specialized library which has the biggest collection of scientific periodicals in Greece and offers on-line services. It also has an amphitheatre available for scientific seminars, symposia and lectures. Conferences, regular seminars and publications are among its activities. The Foundation provides databases and other pertinent information.

This Foundation is the main Greek research centre on history. Apart from its own research activity, it finances research programmes in institutes of higher education and research organizations in Greece. It also aims at using computer technology for historical studies and broaden the educational base for young researchers by providing seminars, doctoral theses and scholarships. The three historical institutes of the foundation study every possible historical aspect, as well as subjects or periods neglected by other scholars. Its International Affairs Office co-operates with corresponding institutes abroad for the organization of conferences and the support of the representation of Greece in international organizations such as the European Science Foundation. The EIE publishes research material in collections, monographs and articles. It also exploits archival material by preparing databases.

STRUCTURE

The Society for Macedonian Studies has founded the Centre for Macedonian Diaspora, the Institute for Balkan Studies, the Historical Archive of Macedonia and the Museum for the Macedonian Struggle.

PROFILE

It houses a library specialized in the history of Macedonia and Balkan history, a gallery of Modern Greek art, an important archive collection, the greatest theatre in northern Greece, a lecture hall and a conference hall. Its activities include publications, organization of international conferences, exhibitions and prizes awards.

The society's aim is the collection, recording, classification, preservation, study and publication of historical archival material which relates to Macedonia in particular and Greece in general. It focuses on the History of Macedonia and the Balkans, especially in the Byzantine and early modern period. The society focusses on the nationalist and "factual" approach of history. It is a member of the Pan-Macedonian Association, and it organizes its World Conference every four years.

STRUCTURE

Six research departments:

Dept. of Ancient and Medieval History (until the end of 14th century); Dept. of the Ottoman-Turkish Period (15th until the end of 18th century); Dept. of the Rebirth and National Liberation Movement (1800–1919); Dept. of the Interwar Period (1919–1941); Dept. of the National Liberation War and Contemporary History; Dept. of Balkan Studies

The institute is a research institute, but recently started to offer post-graduate education as well. It houses a big historical library as well as a collection of documents, some also of (auto-)biographical nature

The research of the institute focuses on national history, which is also its explicit task as stipulated by the law on scientific activities and its statute. The institute is by far the most important institution for historical research in Macedonia, employing most historians and producing most of the historiographic output in the country. Most historians at the institute focus on political history within the framework of a positivist approach, which emphasizes the importance of “facts”.

The institute also publishes bibliographies and edits documents.

Minorities (esp. the large Albanian one) are grossly under-represented at the institute and are rarely studied.

PUBLICATIONS

Periodicals: Glasnik na institutot za nacionalna istorija (the main historical journal in Macedonia); in irregular frequencies, an anthology of selected articles of the journal appear in English as the Review of the Institute for National History.

The major recent publications of the Institute are:

STAFF

Head: Prof. Darinka Petreska

Research and teaching staff: 15

STRUCTURE

The institute includes a branch for didactics and curriculum development.

PROFILE

The members of the university Institute of History have mainly teaching obligations, but some of them are also engaged in research. In contrast to the Institute for National History, the Institute of History at the Philosophical Faculty does not conduct research projects. The institute runs a M.A. program in history.

The institute does not have a coherent research policy, as the contents of its research depend on the decisions of the historians at the institute. Almost all recent publications deal with various aspects of the history of Macedonia, primarily its political and diplomatic history during the 19th and 20th centuries. There are also publications on regional and medieval history as well as on ethnic relations. Social history is mainly confined to Assistant Professor Violeta Ačkoska's publications on the agrarian question in Macedonia and communist agrarian policies after the Second World War.

PUBLICATIONS

Members of the institute are the backbone of the editorial staff of Istorija, which is the journal of the Union of the Societies of Historians of the Republic of Macedonia'. This journal also publishes materials on didactics of history education, prepared by members of the Institute of History.

Major recent monographs of members of the institute are:

- Violeta Ačkoska, Agrarno-sopstveničkite odnosi, promeni i protsesi vo Makedonija, 1944-1953. Skopje: INI 1998.
- Mihajlo Minoski: Avnojska jugoslavija i makedonskoto nacionalno prašanje (1943-1946). Skopje: Menora 2000.

STRUCTURE

The institute has a research and a documentation department.

PROFILE

Main sources of funding: Romanian Academy and some private donations.

The institute studies aspects of life in Romania under the Communist regime, 1945–1989: economic and social issues; institutions and legislation; culture and development of ideas; language and other forms of expression; surveillance and repression; accommodation and resistance; everyday life. It also investigates forms of totalitarianism during the reign of King Carol II (1939–1940), the Iron Guard government (1940–1941) and the rule of Marshal Ion Antonescu (1941–1944) as well as political movements and ideological trends which contested the parliamentary regime in Romania between the wars. It also compares European and Romanian totalitarianism and their influences, similarities, and specific aspects.

It detects sources of information, collects historical materials, registers and preserves oral history, and publishes studies and documents about the history of totalitarianism in Romania.

It has contacts to a wide range of academic and memorial institutions in Europe and Northern America.

PUBLICATIONS:

Staff: 13

PROFILE

The department receives most of its funds from the state, and also some international programmes (especially Tempus).

It has mainly teaching obligations, and does not have autonomous research centres. In comparison to teaching, research does not enjoy particular attention.

There is therefore no specific thematic focus in research. The dominant fields are: archaeology and local history; economic history of the inter-war rural areas (Dumitru Sandru); history of religions in ancient times and in the Middle Ages.

Dean: Ioan Ciupercă, deputy: Mihai Cojocaru.

Eminent historians: Gheorghe Platon, Vasile Neamțu, Ioan Caproșu, Vasile Cristian

Staff: 34

STRUCTURE

Four departments: Ancient History and Archaeology, Medieval History, Modern History, Contemporary History.

Research Centres:

- The Interdisciplinary Centre for Archaeo-Historical Studies (prehistory, history and archaeology of the classical ancient times, Romanian ethno-genesis and Early Middle Ages)
- “Gheorghe I. Bratianu” history centre (social history and anthropological history, history of culture, history of international relations).

PROFILE

Sources of funding: public funds, student fees, foreign funds (Phare, Tempus, Socrates).

The faculty is mainly a teaching institution. It offers two postgraduate courses: Romanians in International Dealings as well as Ancient and Medieval History Sources. Despite the existence of research centres, there is no clear and extended institutional system to organise research.

What research is done concentrates on great political-military events of national history, and is often carried out in a jingoistic, sometimes even nationalist a manner. In a methodological plan, the so-called “positivist” empiricism prevails, as part of political history of traditional type, built around the idea of the nationstate and the imperative of its historic recognition. There is little effort at innovation discernible, although there are some new tendencies, such as social history and historical anthropology (Florin Alexandru Platon).

The faculty has contacts with many universities in Western Europe.

PROFILE

The Historical Institute is often called the Historical Institute of the Serbian Academy of Sciences and Arts, although it is financed as an independent research organisation. This assumption is caused by the fact the institute is situated in the building of the Academy, and by the fact that Academy members played a decisive role in the Institute's work up to the 2000.

The Historical Institute is a research organisation, although in the 1950's it was engaged in PhD courses as well. Thereafter, faculty departments gained a monopoly in the teaching process. It is the only centre for Ottoman studies in Serbia, and a big centre for studies on the 19th century, especially the social history of that period. It has its own big library, and the Academy library is in the same building.

PUBLICATIONS

Periodical: Istorijski časopis.

PROFILE

The institute is financed mostly by the Serbian Ministry of Science and Technology.

The Institute for the Recent History of Serbia deals with the period after 1918. In the beginning, it was “a Republican” institution, while the Institute for Contemporary History was “a Federal” one. Already in the 1980’s this division became irrelevant. After the NATO bombardment, the institute lost its building and came to the very same building where the Institute for Contemporary History had already been. In the last decade, the Institute for the Recent History of Serbia is more oriented toward social history.

PROFILE

The institute is financed mostly by the Ministry of Science and Technology.

Like all other institutions, the Institute for Contemporary History experienced a turn toward new methodologies and topics during 1990's. A peculiar feature is the presence of the institute's researchers in media and public life, due to the politically provocative character of their topics (especially those concerning World War II and Communism). Its library merged with the library of the Institute for the Recent History of Serbia, and with the library of the Institute for European Studies. The most valuable items in that merged library are its rare periodical publications.

STRUCTURE

The Department has the following sections: Ancient History, Middle Ages, Byzantine History, Modern History, Contemporary History, National Middle Ages, National Modern History (15th–19th centuries), History of Yugoslavia, Methodology, Introduction to Historical Studies, Auxiliary Historical Studies.

PROFILE

The Department of History is a research and teaching institution covering all periods of history. Some periods (Ancient East, Ancient Greece) are studied in Serbia only at this department. The department is traditionally one of the main centres of historical research in Serbia, concerning most of the other topics as well. Methodologically, the department has always been the panache of Serbian historiography. It also houses a big historical library, especially valuable for early 20th century publications, collected by department professors before the World War II.

From 1963 to 1993, the history department included the Institute for the Research of the History of Vojvodina. Therafter it was reduced to the department, with the curriculum parallel to that at the Belgrade history department, with some specific subjects such as “The History of Southeast Europe”.

PROFILE

The history department in Novi Sad is a research and teaching institution. In most recent times, it developed research projects oriented toward the specific historical heritage of Vojvodina as a multi ethnic historical space. Studies of minority history are also well represented. Some of the leading researchers of the department belong to minorities.

STRUCTURE

The institute is organised in two groups: economic and social history, political and cultural history. The research is organised in the following programmes:

1. The political, ideological and cultural history of Slovenes from mid 19th century to 1990.
2. Economic and social history of Slovenes from mid 19th century to 1990.
3. Slovenes under occupying forces and in conflict with each other.
4. Political history of the Slovenes in Yugoslavia 1958–1963.
5. The understanding of money in 19th century Slovenia.
6. Casualties of War on the Territory of the Republic of Slovenia during and immediately after the Second World War.

PROFILE

Researchers of the Institute of Contemporary History (formerly Institute of the History of the Workers' Movement) are mostly involved in the study of contemporary Slovene history. In addition to the contents that can be read from the above mentioned programmes and projects, researchers also deal with cultural and political history and the history of everyday life. Within the project "Slovenes under occupying forces and in conflict with each other" a chapter on women's roles "as subjects within the activities of the anti-partisan camp in Slovenia" deserves special mention. The project on the political history of Slovenes in Yugoslavia 1958–1963 treats the first serious interethnic conflicts in socialist Yugoslavia and the beginnings of liberalism.
